

Greenspace Is All Around in Manchester, Vermont

Marcus Helm, Middlebury College
Data sourced from Vermont Center for Geographic Information

Manchester is a rural town surrounded by pastureland and farms, flanked also on either side by thick forests. Even so, the small community boasts two main parks open to the public, as well as a golf course and forest areas nestled among its developed areas. Parks, forests, and other forms of greenspace are found even in the downtown area, maintaining the natural feel of the nearby countryside and providing opportunities for outdoor recreation. The ownership of these areas are labeled when contiguous.
